To Whom It May Concern:

This letter comes as a letter of reference for Adam Frankenfeld. I have known Mr. Frankenfeld since the fall semester of 2011 when he began his undergraduate studies at Trinity Christian College. I have served as his professor for a few courses, and have directed him in several campus theatrical productions. I know him to be capable, thoughtful, and resilient.

Mr. Frankenfeld has exhibited a high level of perseverance in his undergraduate academic curriculum, working diligently to understand material and to make connections between courses and across academic disciplines. He has a passion for game design, and has worked to incorporate several different types of classes into his coursework, including classes in Computer Science, Theatre, Rhetoric, and Communication Arts. This variety of training has helped to provide Mr. Frankenfeld with not only the practical tools for design, but also the theoretical and philosophical considerations of how and why certain design decisions are made, and what those decisions can communicate to potential users or audience members.

As a theatre practitioner, Adam brings commitment, energy, and creativity to each production with which he is involved. He will be taking a Production Design class with me in the upcoming semester, which is focused on understanding how to use the design concepts of line, shape, color, space, and texture in order to best create setting and communicate relationship, importance, and mood. This course has the potential for further developing and strengthening the choices that Adam seeks to make in game design, and I have confidence that he will engage meaningfully with the subject matter, finding ways for the material to clearly translate to his professional and personal goals.

I strongly recommend Mr. Frankenfeld for an internship in the game industry. Please feel free to contact me with any questions, concerns, or clarifications.

Best Regards,
